TOM KENDALL SAYS WILLARD LOOKS FINE

NEW CAMP WILL PROBABLY DEVELOP
LARGE BODIES OF ORE AT DEPTH

Tom Kendall has faith in Willard, and it is not blind faith, either, for Tom can see as far underground as anybody and his inspection of the new district, from which he returned yesterday, was most thorough. He said:

"I am confident that Willard will make good, although not enough work has yet been done to prove up big bonanzas or justify the asking of big prices for the properties. The district is located at the rim of Big Meadows in the Humboldt range, within less than an hour's auto ride of Lovelock. It is ideally situated for a mining camp."

"The country is shot through with massive slate dykes, in one of which the mineralization occurs which has caused the Willard excitement. In the dyke is a network of quartz stringers, some of them of considerable proportions. In the original strike the entire excavation from the shaft is being shipped. I understand that it averages $47 to the ton. In the smaller seams one can find real jewelry ore. It is my belief that with depth the stringers will come together and either the slate give way to quartz, or a vein of considerable width will be found with the slate dyke acting as one of its walls."

"It looks to me as though Willard would make into a big milling proposition. Rochester, its close neighbor, is now humming. Bullion is going out in considerable quantities, while development work is being carried on extensively."

Mr. Kendall says that a telephone line has been completed to the camp and that a power line is only three and a half miles distant.
